

CADETTE BADGES TO DO AT HOME

Newspaper cartoons, comic books, graphic novels . . . comic art is a broad, exciting, and growing field. Comics are sometimes described as “sequential art,” though some are only one panel. So what is a comic, exactly? It’s a visual story told however you would like to tell it. Go for it!

STEPS

1. Delve into the world of comics
2. Choose a story to tell
3. Draw it out
4. Frame it in four panels
5. Add the words

Purpose

When I’ve earned this badge, I’ll know how to create my own comic.

STEPS	BADGE REQUIREMENTS	OPTION 1	OPTION 2	OPTION 3
Step 1	Delve into the world of comics.	Collect comic strips from the paper for one week or check them out online. Read them each day, paying attention to how all the elements work together. Keep track of what you like and don’t like, how artists show feelings and actions, and how they work timing to make punch lines great.	Read autobiographical information about three comic book artists via books, magazine articles, and/or online. How do their styles differ? Which is your favorite and why?	Make sticky-note comics. Get the hang of comic stories by drawing one of these on a sticky note (rough, rough sketching, remember!): a dog floating on a raft, a hawk diving, or a girl at bat. Take another sticky note and add: the cat that’s swimming past the dog, the prey the hawk is diving for, or the ball the girl is trying to hit. Now, take a third sticky note and add another element to each panel: another cat chasing the first cat that’s swimming past the dog, a larger hawk after the prey the hawk is diving for, or the catcher waiting for the ball the girl is trying to hit. Now, imagine how these could be turned into a comic story. Then make up a story from there.
Step 2	Choose a story to tell.	Think of a story from your life. Choose something that happened to you, a friend, or a family member. It could be a funny moment or a dramatic one, a favorite memory or an activity from Girl Scouts you want to share.	Think of a story from a book or movie. Have you seen a movie or read a book recently that had a part in it that you could turn into a comic strip?	Make something up. Think about the comic books, comic strips, or graphic novels you’ve liked. Now think of your own made-up story that would make a good comic tale.

Step 3	Draw it out.	Use tracing paper. Find a comic strip with a style you love. Trace 10 or 12 panels, paying attention to the forms beneath the drawings, the simple shapes the artist likely started with. Now see if you can draw each character in your story in a similar fashion.	Do a "free draw." Get a big stack of scrap paper and just keep drawing. And drawing. And drawing! Move quickly at first. Refine any details as you go until you feel you have characters worked out.	Use a how-to book, video, or software. Are your characters people, animals, or both? Find one of the many manuals, such as the Marvel comic's software, that give step-by-step instruction on drawing humans and particular animals.
Step 4	Frame it in four panels.	Use facial expressions. Some comics use only faces to illustrate their stories, simply changing the expressions to show emotion and move the story along.	Use body postures. For some comic artists—and for some stories, it's more about action than emotion. You can leave the faces pretty much the same and move the story along by showing small movements, such as shrugs, and big actions, such as running and leaping.	Use both facial expressions and body posture. Illustrate movement and emotion using both techniques. Many artists will switch from one style to the other: One panel might show a ball falling on a girl's head, and the next panel might show a close-up of her face as she reacts.
Step 5	Add the words.	Add some dialogue. If you have more than one character, a classic way to tell your story is through dialogue. If both characters speak in a panel, the one on the left should speak first. Write your character's words in oval conversation bubbles connected to the character with a fine line.	Add thought bubbles. If your story revolves around one character, have her "speak" in thought bubbles, putting her words in ovals connected to her with tiny bubble circles.	Run a narrative in separate boxes below the panels. Instead of telling your story through dialogue or inner thoughts, you can write a running third-person narrative at the bottom of each panel.
